What to Expect from Your Energy Foot Spa Session?

At the end of an Energy Foot Spa session, the footbath will probably be discolored. Much of this discoloration is due to the minerals in the water or the type of sea salt that is being used in the foot bath, and some of it may be the body releasing toxins from your skin into the water. The color changes in the water will vary between clients and between sessions. It may change a lot or it may change very little. This is normal! The machine is working fine and the body will be absorbing energy regardless of what changes you may or may not see in the water. Our focus is on the energy, not the water changes! When slight color changes occur, the body may choose to detox through the urinary system and through the colon rather than through the lymph system via the skin during a foot spa session. Testing shows that a person's detoxification session will override the geographical nature of the water.

The important thing to remember is that the machine itself is not pulling things out of your body. Rather, when your body absorbs the energy in the water, it is actually absorbing vital energy on a cellular level, helping to create cell balance. Once the body receives the energy, it starts detoxing on its own. Again, this may happen while the feet are in the bath, or through the urinary system, bowels and skin as the body is able to release waste products more readily. Many foot spa users find that they urinate and/or their bowels move more than usual in the first few hours following their foot bath.

What is the Energy Foot Spa?

The Energy Foot Spa is a natural health device that may help your body strengthen and balance itself!

The Energy Foot Spa works through the most basic and plentiful substance in your body, water.

The human body is approximately 80% water. Water is an excellent conductor of electricity. The human body functions off of electromagnetic signals. Similar to a car battery that charges a car, the human body greatly benefits from being recharged. The Energy Foot Spa charges the water and the water (in which your feet soak) charges your entire body.

Jackie Stevens and/or Enchanted Herb Pantry, LLC, makes no claims. This product is not intended to prevent, diagnose, mitigate, treat or cure any disease.
